PEGASUS 1990

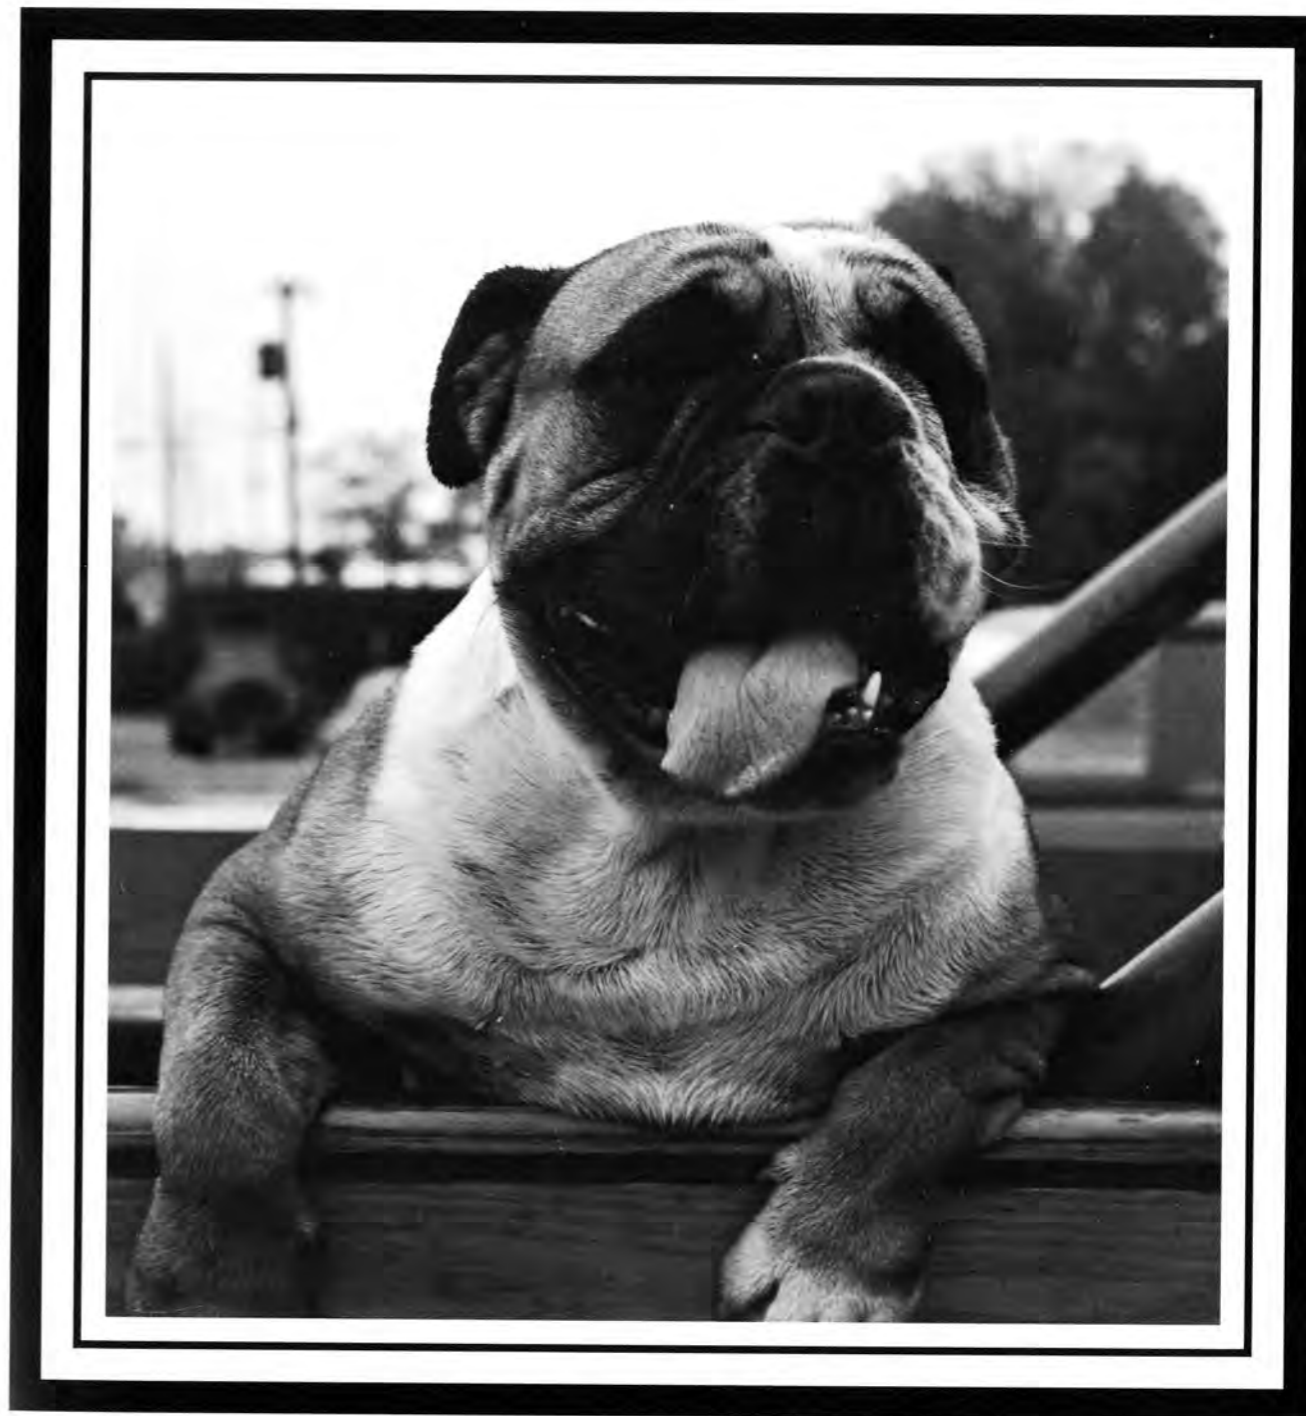

Here is our second home for four years. The MSU-CVM has 8 acres of floor space that took 5 years and $32 million to build. The first class graduated in 1981, making this year's seniors the tenth class.

From The Dean's Desk

I never cease to marvel at the energy, excitement, and creativity that our students at MSU, and especially those students in the College of Veterinary Medicine, exhibit in their day to day pursuit of career goals. CVM students have had a wonderful year! Consider a few of their achievements: They sponsored a wide array of speakers to the Student Chapter (SCAVMA), supported a number of specialty shortcourses (ophthalmology, equine, and pet bird medicine), planned and hosted a very successful symposia for students of Southeastern Colleges of Veterinary Medicine, and brought home the bacon in successfully bidding for the 1992 National SAVMA Symposium. These gals and guys have got some talent! Perhaps the event that contributed most to the promotion of our profession this year was another highly successful "Open House". Over 6300 visitors attended this event and were fully informed as to the mission of our profession. Over 125 students participated in the planning, set-up, and operation of this 2-day intensive event. By every measure, one has to conclude that veterinary medicine was greatly promoted and marketed at this event, and the fruits of this labor will be enjoyed by the entire profession. Those students who gave of their valuable time and talents are highly commended for these selfless acts, and rank high on my "favorite people" list. They will be successful veterinarians!

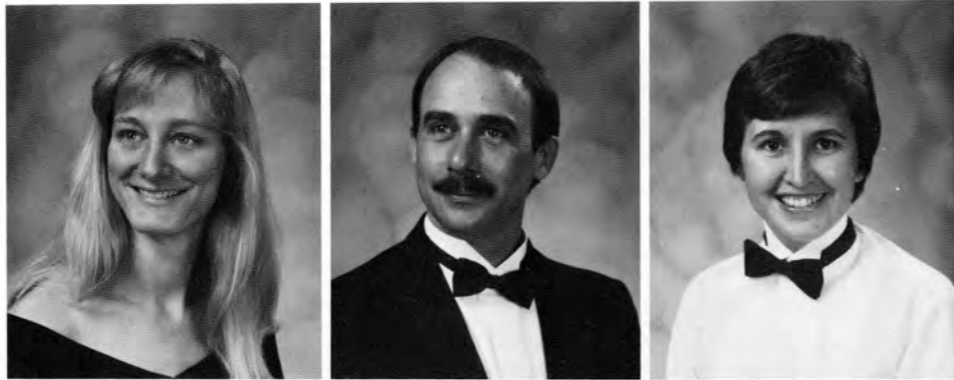

The college completed an intensive year of self-study and strategic planning resulting in the formation of the Gulf States Consortium of Veterinary Colleges and an award from the Pew Charitable Trusts for $275,000 to establish a program in aquatic pathobiology. A number of faculty and staff worked hard on this mission and proved once again that hard work pays great dividends. Of course, all of us chose this fine profession because we knew that hard work was the watch-word and the prerequisite to success. Now all we have to do is convince ourselves that veterinary services are valuable and remuneration should be more commensurate with our training and experience! Those of you who complete your program and leave us this year, please remember to be thankful for the vast opportunities afforded you in this magnificent country, and while you are thinking, remember those faculty and staff that shared their time and expertise to help you achieve your goals.

Finally, out of the classroom, the juniors are enjoying a change of atmosphere. The clinical rotations offer a welcome break and a chance to get actual hands on experience.

Scott Dorin holds a calf at the petting zoo at Open House 1989.

Greg Howell assists a future young veterinarian at Open House 1989.

A Year In The Clinics

The juniors spent a hard year in the clinics but they still seemed to find time to enjoy themselves. Even though they stayed quite busy, most still found time to participate in CVM activities and events. Clinical rotations provide the students with a wide variety of experiences. The juniors were finally able to put their knowledge to the true test of clinical medicine.

A good anesthetist would have their dog waking up moments after the last suture was placed. That art, obviously, had not yet been mastered, while we sat in the hall with our sleepy dogs.

Southeastern Conference

January 19-21, 1990 was a very busy weekend for many of the students at the CVM. They planned and hosted the Second Annual Southeastern Conference. Veterinary students from University of Tennessee, University of Georgia, and Louisiana State University attended this awesome affair. The feature speaker was Dr. Bob Lewis from UGA. He spoke about practice management and what a newly graduated veterinarian needs to know about the business aspect of veterinary medicine. A great deal was learned and fun times were had by all that attended. Isis Johnson-Brown and Carlo Vitale did a tremendous job in the organization of such a big event.

Open House

This year's Open House was once again better than ever. Each year we have a larger attendance and this year was no different with 6,433 guests. The favorite exhibits were the petting zoo, the fistulated cow and exotic animals. Of course, tours of the school were also continuous.

Pegasus Staff

I would like to give everyone on the yearbook staff a big thanks, especially to our advisor, Dr. Charles Pugh, Helen McCahon, Gretchen Steininger and Anne Ritchie. The rest of the staff included: Terri Kocha, Dana Brooks, Terry Cavallaro, Melissa Burton, Anne Ragers, Susan Quigley, Matt Bailey, and Dianne Smith. Anne took the position of manager and worked closely with the production company and our bank account. Gretchen was in charge of photography and Helen took over while both Anne and I were gone. There is a lot of work that goes into publishing a yearbook and everyone who helped was invaluable. We hope that you all enjoy this years yearbook and hope that it will hold some of the memories of your years here at the CVM close to your heart.

We all wish the graduates the best of luck in their future endeavors.

Sincerely,
Deb Goul '91
