April 7th. 1894.

Hon. H. D. Money,

Washington, D. C.

My dear Colonel:

I desire to introduce to you my friend, Mrs. J. F. Digger, who is a Mississippian, and one of those Mississippians who has claims on all Mississippians wherever she finds them.

Mrs. Digger's husband is employed in the Agricultural Department as Agricultural editor of the Experiment Station Record, and she, like the good and faithful wife and woman she is, desires to secure a position in the High Schools at Washington, or as teacher in some private school there, and wants a friend in Washington to whom she may refer. I know no one more deserving the honor than yourself, or one who I think will more cheerfully render the desired assistance.

Mrs. Digger was Miss Fannie Camp, is a graduate from the Industrial Institute and College at Columbus, was one of my favorite there, graduated with the first class with distinction, took a post graduate course at the University of Mississippi, and was afterwards engaged as assistant in the Department of English at the I. I. & C., and remained there until she married two or three years ago. She is worthy and deserving, Colonel, and I cordially commend her to your friendship and favor.

Yours very truly,

J. M. Stone
