Senator John Stennis,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

Dear John:

As a member of the Committee of the South of the National Planning Association, I received several extra copies of its recent report on the establishment of new industry in the south.

Knowing your interest in this subject, it occurred to me that you might like to see this report and that you possibly would not have that opportunity unless I sent you a copy.

I greatly enjoyed my visit with you and Clyde Matthews and Edgar Poe last month. I hope when you are down in this part of the world you will let us hear from you.

With personal regards, I am

Sincerely,

Dear George:

I appreciate very much your thoughtfulness in forwarding me copies of the recent report of the Committee of the South of the National Planning Association.

I have been very much interested in the press reports at the time this report was released, and you can be sure that the information compiled here will be of benefit to me in several fields.

You know, a lot of our Northern friends have become reluctant to go along with us in several matters of great benefit to the South, because various interests in their home States have adopted the cry that industry is fleeing to the South. I think this report of the National Planning Association makes it very clear that most of the industrial gains which the South has achieved have not been at the expense of other sections of the country, and that they contribute greatly to our over-all national welfare.

I too enjoyed our little visit when you were in Washington. I shall expect to look you up the next time anything brings me to New Orleans.

With best wishes, I am

Sincerely yours,

U. S. Senator
