1971 Chattanooga Times biographical statement:

Norman Bradley, recently named editor of the Chattanooga Times, is a man whose journalism career spans 37 years in the South as a reporter, editor, and news executive.

Born in 1913 in Flora, Mississippi, his early life was marked with academic success. He was class valedictorian at Canton High School, Canton, Mississippi, and was graduated from Millsaps College in Jackson, Mississippi, with highest honors. In college he was a member of Omicron Delta Kappa, national leadership fraternity, and Eta Sigma, a scholastic leadership fraternity. While a student, he got his first newspaper experience serving as editor of the campus weekly' newspaper for two years and campus correspondent for both daily newspapers in Jackson.

His fulltime newspaper career began in 1934 with the Jackson Clarion-Ledger where he served as reporter, state editor, and assistant to the managing editor. Three years later, he joined the Associated Press at Little Rock, Arkansas, and spent ten years as a news reporter in southern cities. From 1942 to 1947, he did a stint as AP correspondent in Chattanooga, an assignment which led to the beginning of a lasting association with Chattanooga newspapers. He became an editorial writer with The Chattanooga Times in 1947 but left in 1955 to take the editorship of the newly established State-Times in Jackson, Mississippi. He returned to Chattanooga--this time to stay--in 1956 as executive news editor of the Chattanooga Times. He was named associate editor in 1958. He was editor of the Chattanooga Post, an afternoon daily, from its establishment in 1966 until its suspension in 1970 when he again returned to the Times as senior associate editor.

Bradley has been known to his journalistic colleagues in the South by his courtly manner, gentle speech, abiding patience, and studious approach to complex issues. During his 16 years total service as an editorial page writer for the Times, his skill as an editorial interpreter of contemporary issues has gained him national recognition. He has participated in numerous journalistic workshops and seminars throughout the region and is a frequent speaker to local and regional audiences. His succession to editorship of the Times was announced after Martin S. Ochs relinquished the position to become university editor at the University of Virginia. Bradley had been acting editor for a year while Ochs was on a leave of absence and traveling in Asia, Africa, and Europe.

"He has long been considered one of the South's finest journalists," said Forrest Wallace Cato, "but he is also one of the finest in the country. Nobody knows the business of journalism like Norman Bradley."

"Norman Bradley," said Mrs. Ruth Golden, publisher of the Times, "has a deep concern for his city, for his fellowman, and for his newspaper. He is a calm, reflective man with an unerring ability to cut to the heart of the matter and thereby consider the essential without undue influence from the peripheral.

"The Times has been fortunate that Mr. Bradley has brought his judgments to the editorial page in past years, most notably during the preceding months when he served as acting editor.

"To name him editor is a high privilege, and I look forward to many years of harmonious association."

Bradley's activities have not been confined solely to the journalistic profession, but have extended into community service as well. A leading Methodist layman in the Chattanooga area for many years, Bradley has served on numerous civic boards and committees that embrace a wide range of public service interests. He has made journalistic observations of social and political problems in Latin America and South America under the auspices of International House of New Orleans. Last summer he spent three weeks in Florence, Italy, visiting villages and cultural centers in many parts of that nation.

He has served as charter member and first president of the Chattanooga Adult Education Council; member of the founding board of directors of the Chattanooga Area Literacy Movement; member of the founding board of directors, Chattanooga Council, Experiment in International Living; former trustee of the World Foundation for Literacy; board member and president, Chattanooga Family Service Agency; corporate member, Metropolitan Council for Community Services.

In addition, he has been president of the Allied Arts Council; member of the founding board Team Evaluation Center (diagnostic agency for persons with multiple handicaps); board member, Florence Crittenton Home; board member and former secretary, Metropolitan YMCA; board member and chairman, Methodist Student Center at UTC; board member and vice president, Chattanooga Symphony Association; member of the founding board, organizing president, Allied Arts Fund; board member, Chamber of Commerce; board member, Chattanooga Automobile Club; and member of the founding board, Citizens for Court Modernization. He is also a member of the Chattanooga Kiwanis Club.

Active in church work, he has been a teacher for many years in the Sunday School of First-Centenary Methodist Church. He has also served as member and chairman of the church's Official Board, member of the Holston Methodist Conference Committee on Publications, and he is listed in Who's Who in Methodism.

His professional associations include membership in Sigma Delta Chi, professional journalism fraternity, and membership in the National Conference of Editorial Writers.

He is married to the former Frances Weems of Shubuta, Mississippi, and they have two children--Caroline, whose husband, Van Cavett, is an editorial page writer with the Louisville (Ky.) Times, and William H. Bradley, an attorney with the firm of Sutherland, Asbill and Brennan, in Atlanta.

When Bradley's ascension to the Times editorship was announced, one of his tributes came in an editorial in a rival newspaper. The editorial, which called Bradley's elevation "fitting recognition of his service to the Times," went on to praise him for expressing "the viewpoint of his newspaper in the continuing discussions that are a part of the service of the press to freedom in America."
